

Oregon House District 28 — 2026 Voter Guide

Randall Fryer vs. Dacia Grayber

One Wants Government to Live Within Your Budget. The Other
Has a Record of Asking Taxpayers for More.

RANDALL FRYER

One Has a Salem Record. The Other Wants Taxpayers Back in the Driver's Seat.

RANDALL FRYER

Retired Physician • Army Medical Corpsman • SW Portland Resident

Randall Fryer is a retired physician who trained in family medicine and later spent years staffing rural and remote emergency departments.^[1]

Before medicine, Fryer worked in Fortune 500 software. He also served as an Army medical corpsman and received an honorable discharge.^[1]

He's not a career politician. His argument to District 28 is straightforward:

- Taxes should reflect what median-income Oregonians can actually afford.
- Highway tolling should require direct voter approval.
- Teachers should be trusted to restore order and teach reading, writing, math and reasoning.
- The people paying the bills should help set the limits.

Fryer believes the people paying the bills should help set the limits.

DACIA GRAYBER

Incumbent State Representative • Firefighter-Paramedic

Grayber has served in the Oregon Legislature since 2021, first representing HD35 and then HD28 following redistricting.^[4]

She is a professional firefighter-paramedic and chairs the House Labor and Workforce Development Committee.^{[2][4]}

But an incumbent isn't judged only by a résumé.

An incumbent comes with receipts. Grayber's record includes:

- Voting Yes on HB 3991, the transportation package later put before voters as Measure 120
- Advocating expanded education funding
- Supporting greater healthcare investment
- Supporting climate-focused and public-transportation infrastructure^[2]

THE INCUMBENT TEST

District 28 doesn't have to guess how Grayber would govern. It can examine how she already has.

Put the Receipts Side by Side.

The candidates begin from substantially different assumptions about what state government should do and how it should pay for those responsibilities.

ISSUE	RANDALL FRYER	DACIA GRAYBER
Taxes	Tie taxes to what median-income Oregonians can actually carry. ^[1]	Voted Yes on HB 3991, which included doubling the statewide transit payroll tax from 0.1% to 0.2%. ^[3]
Transportation	Prioritize the roads and bridges people actually use. Require direct voter approval before highway tolling.	Supports public transportation and climate-focused infrastructure and voted for HB 3991.
Schools	Reading. Writing. Math. Critical reasoning. High standards. Teacher judgment.	Calls for redefining what is possible in education funding and greater investment.
Government Programs	Ask whether programs work before taxpayers are asked for another check.	Chief-sponsored a $5 million firefighter-apprenticeship pilot that later received additional funding while evaluation/reporting timelines remained outstanding.
Healthcare	A retired physician who has delivered care in family practice and rural and remote emergency departments.	Campaign position: “Health care is a human right.”

THE QUESTION VOTERS FACE

One side asks Salem for more. Fryer asks to see the receipt first.

83% of Oregon Voters Said No to Taxes & Transportation.

In 2025, the Oregon Legislature passed HB 3991 with a $4.3 billion transportation package that increased or added transportation-related taxes and fees.^[3]

Among its provisions was an increase in the statewide transit payroll tax from 0.1% to 0.2%. Measure 120 also included a six-cent gas-tax increase and higher vehicle registration/title fees.

$4.3B

Transportation-tax package passed by the Legislature

Then Oregon voters got their say.

More than 83% rejected Measure 120.

The rejection was so decisive that OPB described the result as a blunt message to state leaders to find another way to fund transportation.

DACIA GRAYBER

She voted for it.

Her campaign also supports climate-resilient, carbon-neutral infrastructure and public-transportation projects.

But after an 83–17 rejection, voters have already sent Salem a message about this transportation tax package.

RANDALL FRYER

Let the people paying have a say.

Fryer's position:

- Base taxes on Oregon median income.
- Require direct voter approval for highway tolling.
- Plan transportation around how people actually travel.
- Fund roads and bridges District 28 residents actually use.

The people paying the bill should help set the limit.

The Classroom or the Central Office?

Portland Public Schools has been serving fewer students. At the same time, compensation and PERS costs have risen and the district has faced repeated rounds of cuts.

In 2023, a letter from 16 Democratic legislators questioned how much PPS spending was reaching classrooms vs administration.

The letter said PPS was putting approximately 48% of its budget directly into classrooms, compared with approximately 55–56% in comparable Oregon districts, while approximately 6% went to administration versus 2–3% elsewhere.

PPS disputed that framing. But enrollment continued falling and budget pressure continued.

RANDALL FRYER

Fryer emphasizes:

- Reading
- Writing
- Math
- Critical reasoning
- High graduation standards
- Teacher professional judgment

His position is that academic fundamentals should remain central and that school funding should not place excessive pressure on median-income households.

DACIA GRAYBER

Grayber calls for greater investment in education and has argued that Oregon should rethink what is possible in school funding.^[2]

QUESTION FOR VOTERS

Should the next priority be additional investment, stronger academic focus, or some combination of both?

Fund It. Expand It. Measure It Later?

Grayber's firefighter background is real. So is her legislative record.

Grayber was a chief sponsor of HB 2294, which created a BOLI pilot program providing grants for firefighter apprenticeship training.^{[3][5]} The bill became law in 2023.

The records highlight $5 million for the original program, additional subsequent funding, and a required effectiveness-reporting timeline. It also identifies separate firefighter-apprenticeship spending through the Oregon State Fire Marshal.^[6]

The concern isn't firefighter training.

Firefighters need a strong pipeline.

The concern is whether government should expand spending before taxpayers see the results of what they already funded.

RANDALL FRYER

Fryer spent years working in emergency departments where resources were limited and decisions had consequences.

His approach is:

Measure first. Prove it works. Then decide whether taxpayers should spend more.

DACIA GRAYBER

Her approach on the apprenticeship program raises a different question:

Why expand a government program before its required evaluation tells taxpayers whether the original investment worked?

"A worthy cause does not eliminate the need for accountability."

Two Different Perspectives on Healthcare.

House District 28 includes OHSU and a large number of healthcare professionals and professional households.

RANDALL FRYER

Fryer practiced family medicine before working in rural and remote emergency departments.^[1]

His background gives him direct experience with staffing, patient demand, resource limits, and healthcare delivery.

His broader tax position emphasizes what median-income Oregonians can afford.

DACIA GRAYBER

Grayber's campaign says:

■ "Health care is a human right."

But when it comes to the bills, doctors still have to be paid. Hospitals still have to operate. Medication still has to be purchased. Government still has to raise the money.

By declaring something a right doesn't make its cost disappear.

THE FINANCING QUESTION

The danger is promising more healthcare spending without being equally clear about who ultimately pays for it.

Roads, Transit, and Who Decides.

Transportation is one of the clearest differences between the candidates.

RANDALL FRYERFryer emphasizes:

- Roads and bridges people actually use
- Planning based on real travel patterns
- Direct voter approval before tolling^[1]

DACIA GRAYBERGrayber supports:

- Public transportation
- Climate-resilient infrastructure
- Carbon-neutral infrastructure
- Forward-looking transportation investment^[2]

QUESTION FOR VOTERS

What balance should Oregon strike between roads, public transit, climate goals, and direct voter control over tolling?

Grayber Has a Record. Voters Should Use It.

AREA	GRAYBER’S LEGISLATIVE RECORD
Transportation	A Yes vote on HB 3991. ^[3]
Education	Support for greater education investment.
Workforce Development	Chief sponsorship of the firefighter-apprenticeship program. ^{[3][5]}
Healthcare	Support for expanded healthcare access.
Infrastructure	Support for climate-focused transportation investment. ^[2]

Randall Fryer Doesn’t Have a Salem Record.

That’s precisely his argument.

He isn’t asking voters to reward another legislative résumé. He’s asking them to change the standard:

- ☒ Can median-income families afford it?
- ☒ Does it actually work?
- ☒ Did voters approve it?
- ☒ Have taxpayers seen the results?

Which approach better matches your expectations for House District 28?

District 28: Check the Receipt.

RANDALL FRYER

Retired physician • Army medical corpsman • SW Portland resident

His priorities are:

- Taxes tied to median-income affordability
- Direct voter approval before tolling
- Academic fundamentals
- Teacher judgment
- Roads and bridges
- Limits on government growth^[1]
