

Portland: Are We Getting Results?

Ciatta Thompson vs Shannon Jones Isadore — A District
33 election guide to public safety, addiction, homelessness & accountability.

DOWNTOWN • NORTHWEST PORTLAND • PEARL • LINNTON • CATHEDRAL PARK
• FOREST PARK

General Election • November 3, 2026

LOOK AT THE RECORD. LOOK AT THE RESULTS. THEN DECIDE.

PRESENTED BY NORTHWEST OREGON PAC

Paid for by Northwest Oregon PAC #25045. Not authorized by any candidate committee.

TWO CANDIDATES. ONE DISTRICT.

One Already Serves in Salem. The Other Says Portland Deserves a Different Result.

District 33 includes neighborhoods that experience Portland's biggest policy debates firsthand — from public safety and addiction to homelessness, housing costs and downtown recovery. The candidates come to those problems from very different places.

CIATTA THOMPSON

She Works Downtown. She Sees the Consequences.

Thompson is a working-class Portlander and hotel manager who spent roughly two decades voting Democratic.^[1]

Working downtown changed how she viewed Portland's policies. Seeing addiction, untreated mental illness, crime, rising costs and struggling businesses firsthand led her to question whether policies she once supported were actually producing results.

In 2025, she joined the Republican Party. But her campaign's message isn't simply Republican vs Democrat.

“Portland over party. Results over politics.”

HER PRIORITIES INCLUDE

- More police and firefighters
- Treatment for addiction and serious mental illness

- Lower costs for working families
- Audits and measurable government

SHANNON JONES ISADORE

She's Already in Salem. What Does Her Record Show?

Isadore is a U.S. Marine veteran, family psychotherapist, business owner and founder of Oregon Change Clinic.^{[3][4]}

She was appointed to represent House District 33 in September 2024 and subsequently won election.^[3]

Her campaign highlights accomplishments including funding for the James Beard Market, St. Johns cohousing and Hoyt Arboretum, along with legislation concerning critical energy infrastructure and Moda Center renovations.^[4]

Those are accomplishments voters can evaluate.

HD33 RESIDENTS SHOULD EVALUATE

What changed on the streets and in the neighborhoods they experience every day?

The Walk to School Shouldn't Include Needles.

For years, Portland neighbors pushed lawmakers to restrict mobile syringe-service programs near schools. In 2026, SB 1573 proposed prohibiting mobile or temporary syringe-service locations within 2,000 feet of a school or licensed childcare facility.^[5]

Isadore was among the bill's listed sponsors.^[5] But the proposal never became law.^{[5][6]} It remained in committee after a March 6 attempt to withdraw it failed 11–17.

CIATTA THOMPSON

Thompson argues that creating a buffer around schools is a start, but doesn't solve the underlying addiction.

“What changes at 1,001 feet?”

Move the service farther away and the immediate school area may change. But the addiction doesn't. Her position is that Oregon should measure success through treatment, recovery and stability, not simply the number of services delivered.

SHANNON JONES ISADORE

Isadore did put her name on SB 1573. That's part of the record. So is the outcome:

The Legislature didn't pass it.

After the state proposal failed, Multnomah County acted locally. In June 2026, county commissioners unanimously approved a restriction prohibiting mobile syringe distribution within 1,000 feet of K–12 schools.^[6] The restriction took effect for enforcement August 24.^[7]

THE QUESTION FOR VOTERS

Is supporting legislation enough, or should representation be measured by what actually gets done?

The Pearl Said No. Who Was Listening?

In 2025, the City of Portland leased 1435 NW Northrup Street for a low-barrier overnight shelter in the Pearl District. Residents and businesses raised concerns about the location, safety and neighborhood impacts. The shelter subsequently became the subject of litigation and was later slated for closure.^[8]

CIATTA THOMPSON

This is central to Thompson's campaign argument. She says Portland needs treatment and mental-health capacity, but taxpayers should no longer write blank checks to programs that cannot demonstrate results.

HER APPROACH CALLS FOR

- Treatment.
- Accountability.
- Audits.
- Measurable outcomes.
- And consequences when publicly funded programs repeatedly fail.

QUESTION

When a neighborhood in your district is fighting City Hall, should its state representative be visibly in the fight?

Are We Treating Addiction or Managing It?

Syringe-service programs are considered a public-health intervention intended to reduce infectious-disease transmission and connect people with other services. Multnomah County itself recognizes that evidence while also adopting its new school-buffer restriction.^{[6][7]}

The political disagreement is over what happens after immediate harm is reduced.

CIATTA THOMPSON

Compassion should lead toward recovery.

She supports expanded treatment capacity through public-private partnerships and wants programs receiving taxpayer money evaluated using measurable outcomes.^[2]

For Thompson, success isn't activity. It's people reaching stability.

SHANNON JONES ISADORE

Isadore brings direct professional experience to this debate.

She is a family psychotherapist and founded Oregon Change Clinic, which provides behavioral-health and addiction services.^{[3][4]}

VOTERS NEED TO UNDERSTAND

If structure and accountability matter inside a treatment program, why shouldn't taxpayers expect the same standards from Portland's broader response to addiction and homelessness?

Where Does the Money Go?

In October 2024, Multnomah County announced $1.1 million in opioid-settlement funding for Oregon Change Clinic to lease a 50-bed stabilization facility.

That happened about a month after Isadore was appointed to the Legislature.

CIATTA'S POSITION

Government programs receiving public money should be audited and required to show results.^{[1][2]}

Taxpayers should be able to ask one simple question: What did we get for the money?

What Has Isadore Focused On in Salem?

Isadore's record includes funding for local projects. It also includes support for:

- HB 2995 – reparations task force
- HR 3 – Black Drag Resolution, which she co-chief-sponsored
- SB 1098 – restrictions on removing certain books from schools and libraries
- HB 4138 – restrictions on law-enforcement officers wearing facial coverings

Those are real legislative choices. But while those issues received attention:

- The state school needle-buffer bill failed.^{[5][6]}
- The Pearl shelter fight continued.^[8]
- Addiction and street disorder remained daily concerns.

THE QUESTION ISN'T WHETHER THOSE OTHER ISSUES MATTER

It's what District 33 needed its representative focused on most.

Can Working People Still Afford Portland?

People who show up for work every day are feeling the pressure.

HOUSING

CHILDCARE

TAXES

TRANSPORTATION

EVERYDAY BILLS

CIATTA THOMPSON

Thompson works in a downtown hotel.^[1]

Her focus is on lowering costs for people who still have to show up for the morning shift, night shift and everything in between.

She talks about: taxes, childcare, housing, jobs.^{[1][2]}

SHANNON JONES ISADORE

Isadore spent years working in finance and now serves as vice chair of the House Economic Development, Small Business and Trade Committee.^[3]

She talks about downtown revitalization and economic development.^{[3][4]}

THE TEST IS SIMPLE

Is Portland becoming safer and more affordable for the people who live and work here?

This Race Isn't Simply Red vs. Blue.

It's status quo vs. a demand for different results.

SHANNON JONES ISADORE

Is the incumbent.

She brings military service, behavioral-health experience, business experience and a legislative record that includes public investments and infrastructure initiatives.^{[3][4]}

CIATTA THOMPSON

Is the challenger.

She spent years voting Democratic before deciding that Portland's results required a different approach.

Her campaign asks voters to look beyond party labels and judge government on:

- Safety
- Recovery
- Affordability
- Accountability
- Results^{[1][2]}

THAT'S THE CHOICE

Not whether one candidate cares about Portland and the other doesn't. It's whether Portland should continue its current approach or demand a different standard for success.

THE CHOICE FOR DISTRICT 33

District 33 Lives With the Results.

CIATTA THOMPSON

A former Democrat. Works downtown.
Not a career politician.

She says Portland doesn't need another explanation for why things aren't working.

SHE WANTS

- ☐ Police capacity
- ☐ Real treatment
- ☐ Government accountability
- ☐ Lower costs
- ☐ Programs that prove they work

SHANNON JONES ISADORE

A Marine veteran. Therapist. Clinic owner. Current state representative.

She brings treatment experience and a legislative record that includes funding for local projects. She also represents District 33 while many of its biggest livability fights remain unresolved.

DECIDE WHICH STANDARD PORTLAND SHOULD ACCEPT FOR THE NEXT TWO YEARS

NEEDLES NEAR SCHOOLS

ADDICTION ON THE STREET

SHELTER FIGHTS

EMPTY STOREFRONTS

RISING COSTS

MILLIONS SPENT

Learn more about Ciatta Thompson at ciattathompson.com.

SOURCES & REFERENCES

1. Ciatta Thompson for HD33 — Official Campaign Website
2. Ciatta Thompson for HD33 — Policy
3. Oregon Legislature — Representative Shannon Isadore
4. Shannon Jones Isadore Campaign — Official Campaign Website / Legislative Record
5. Oregon Legislative Information System — SB 1573 (2026)
6. Multnomah County — June 25, 2026 Mobile Syringe Service Ordinance
7. Multnomah County — Syringe Service Restrictions Near Schools
8. OPB / Willamette Week — Northrup Shelter Coverage, 2026